34 THE SACRIFICE TO APOLLO

"This superb picture exhibits a view of vast extent and beauty, in addition to which it is distinguished by two temples on the right, one of which is composed of pilasters and a niche containing a statue; the second is of circular form with pillars of the Corinthian order supporting a dome, and stands on an eminence beyond it.

"In front of the former building are a priest and several attendants assembled before an altar, while one of his assistants is slaying the sacrifice; at the same time a man leading a bull decked for the ceremony, accompanied by a priestess and other attendants, are seen arriving from among a cluster of lofty trees on the left; near these are two herdsmen at the foot of a tree, one of whom is seated, from hence the eye looks over a richly diversified landscape through which flows a river traversed by a bridge of four arches, the distance terminates with a spacious bay partly encompassed by hills. A herd of cattle feed on the foreground."

Inscribed "Il Tempio di Apollo, Claudio Gille. Inven. fecit, Rom. 1668"

5 ft. 9 in. by 7 ft. 5 in.

Painted for Signor Angelino

Engraved by Woollett, Pardone and Frederick Gwellin

"This and the following picture are known under the appellation of the Altieri Claudes, having been purchased from a prince of that name by Mr. Fagan, who concealed them for some time at Naples, and at length succeeded during a popular disturbance to ship them on board an English man-of-war, and consign them to a merchant in this country.

"By some mistake they did not reach their destination, but were landed at a port in the west of England, where they remained for a considerable time and were advertised for sale among custom-house goods; no person, however, bidding the amount of the duty on them, they were fortunately reserved, and ultimately claimed by the owner. These celebrated pictures, for a considerable length of time, were the principal ornaments of the Fonthill Collection. They afterwards became the property of Richard H. Davies, Esq., M.P., for the sum of 12,000*l.*, and were lastly transferred to Leigh Court."—See Smith's 'Catalogue Raisonné,' vol. viii. p. 278.

35 THE LANDING OF ÆNEAS IN ITALY

"This capital picture exhibits on the left a broad river, which extends its devious course through a hilly country, and blends with the distant ocean.

"The opposite side is distinguished by a mass of rocky cliffs on whose sides and summits are buildings, consisting chiefly of round and square towers having the appearance of the outworks of a fortified city, probably intended for Carthage. The base of the mountain is concealed by bushes, and a cluster of lofty trees grow on the bank of the river.

"Here two of the ships of the Trojan wanderer have arrived with his armed followers, and the hero is seen standing at the head of his vessels addressing the leaders of a body of soldiers who are at the foot of the trees already noticed.

"On the same side and close to the front are a shepherd and shepherdess sitting together, while their flock reposes in the shade near them."—See Smith's 'Catalogue Raisonné,' vol. viii. p. 278, 297

36 A HERDSMAN DRIVING CATTLE THROUGH A RIVER

"This agreeable rural scene is chiefly remarkable for a large river which flows in an oblique direction from the right, and thence passing round a large cluster of trees and bushes extends to the base of the distant hills, where it is crossed by a rustic bridge, not far from which may be noticed a round tower and other buildings on the side of a hill.

"There is also on the right a ruin of a beautiful edifice of the Corinthian order standing amidst trees, and in the opposite side and front is a herdsman with a stick driving ten cows and oxen through a fordable part of the stream; beyond him are seen two peasants reclining at the foot of a tree."

53 THE PLAGUE OF ATHENS

"It is perhaps impossible for art to depict with greater pathos or more solemn effect a subject so heartrending as this picture exhibits. The view is a street of the splendid city of Athens, over which numbers of the plague-stricken inhabitants are distributed, some extended on the ground, others prostrated at the portals of the temples and public buildings. Among a group of the afflicted in the foreground are three women, two of them lying on mattresses, and the third seated at the side; near the latter stands a man in a state of distraction, wildly tearing his hair with both hands, close to this person are two men and a woman sitting by the side of a dying female whose noisome stench compels them to close their nostrils, with this group is an infant standing by the side of its deceased parent. It would be harrowing to describe all the scenes of misery and dismay which meet the eye in every part of the picture, the very air appears pregnant with pestilence, and death in his most horrible aspect reigns triumphant throughout."—See Smith's 'Catalogue Raisonné,' vol. viii. p. 96.

62 THE WOMAN TAKEN IN ADULTERY

"The composition consists of five principal and seven subordinate figures of the size of life seen down to the middle. The accused woman with a countenance expressive of deep repentance stands in the centre, and her chief accusers are on her left, the nearest, in a sacerdotal habit and wearing a phylactery on his forehead, is said to have been intended for a portrait of Calvin, the other for that of Luther. The former with a peculiar archness of expression accompanied by a suitable action appears to have made the charge, and is reciting the law laid down by Moses "that such should be stoned, but what sayest thou?"—whilst the latter with a stoical calmness has his eyes fixed on the Saviour who stands on the opposite side in an attitude of appeal to these accusers. The head of a venerable man seen on the woman's right is considered to be a portrait of Rubens' master Otho Venius. Great expression and splendid colouring are the chief characteristics of this capital picture which is said to have been painted for the family of Knuyf of Antwerp, and devolved by inheritance to the celebrated collector, the Canon Knuyf."—*See Smith's 'Catalogue Raisonné,' part ii. 63 THE CONVERSION OF SAUL

"This magnificent picture offers a composition of extraordinary grandeur.

"The principal group consists of four horsemen and six figures on foot, the whole of which are thrown into confusion by the supernatural appearance of the Saviour in the heavens. Saul, the object of this visitation, struck with terror, lies prostrate and senseless on his back in the foreground with one leg on the horse's back, which has fallen forwards upon its knee, at the same instant one of his attendants is stooping at his head to assist him; a little retired from these is another of his escort mounted upon a terrified horse rearing upright, and beyond him is an armed standard bearer. On the right of the picture is a third soldier clad in armour riding a fiery charger which is kicking up behind, those of Saul's attendants on foot are equally affected with terror and dismay.

"A brilliant light emanating from the Saviour is diffused over the centre group, producing an effect at once awful and sublime. In whatever view this superb production is considered, whether with regard to composition and drawing, the richness and glow of the colouring, or the masterly boldness and freedom of the handling, the mind and eye of the connoisseur will dwell upon it with real delight, and confess it to be a work of the highest excellence."—See Smith's 'Catalogue Raisonné,' vol. ii. p. 147
